

Q: Should I mention my reduction in hours as a reason for seeking new work, or leave that out?

TWEETED TO THE BCBS CAREER TUNE-UP EXPERTS

Our thoughts:

Not necessarily, an alternative and common reason to pursue a new position may be that you are looking for new opportunities and challenges. That being said, if the position is being advertised for a particular number of hours and you are unable to meet the requirements, it is important to have a discussion with your potential employer and see if you can reach a compromise.

An additional job search tip: Try not to make any negative comments regarding your past employer or colleagues. It often leads potential employers to wonder what you will say about them.

To follow us on Twitter: <http://twitter.com/CareerTuneUp>

BCBS

For more information please contact:

Rachael Maxcy

Phone: 604-806-5323

Fax: 604-488-0665

E-mail: rmaxcy@bchs.bc.ca